Taking the plunge, Dock style.

wall jump should be built to be easily dislodged therefore giving it an degree of difficulty and requiring accuracy.

The Tyre Jump is pipe tubing or an actual tyre suspended on a sturdy frame. The height can vary depending on the size of the competitor.

The A-Frame consists of two wide ramps. When upright the A-Frame looks like the letter 'A'. The part of the ramp nearest the ground (when upright) is painted in a contrasting colour to the top part. This indicates the part of the ramp that dogs need to make contact with.

There are two different kinds of tunnels. The Pipe Tunnel is a tube through which the dog runs as fast as possible. The Collapse Tunnel conjures up comparisons of a windsock. This is the trickier of the two because the dog has to run through it even though she probably can't see the end of the tunnel to exit.

The Weave Poles are probably the most challenging for dogs to learn because the slalom motion is unnatural to them. Twelve upright poles are set out in a row and have only 550mm of space between each. The dog must enter between the first pole and second pole from the right side, then fluidly step or hop between each pole to the end.

Rock the Dock

Diving Dogs is the newest dog sport that is going from leaps and bounds in the US and it now hitting our shores. What dog owner can resist a canine cannonball launching into the water. These aquatic athletes are part of the newest craze for toy obsessed and water loving canines.

The sport is easy to understand... Doggy jumps off an elevated dock into a portable pool, distance and/or height is measured. He or she that makes the most air and distance takes it all.
